

Your Monstera Variegata likes

Very modest watering

She likes it when the soil dries out completely in between watering. It's winter, so she does not drink as much as she would during growth season. There is also no golden rule like "once a week", it all depends on her and the environment she is in, so you will have to adopt her rhythm rather than submitting her to your own watering schedule 😊

Medium light

Her big leaves like a lot of light, but no direct sun. So don't put her close to a south facing window

Humidity

Moisture in the air helps keep her leaves healthy. It will also avoid the white from getting brown. We recommend to aim for +60% humidity.

Coziness

This plant loves to be snug in the pot. She will be fine in this pot until repotting season in spring, even though it might look like she is growing out of it

Your Monstera Variegata DISlikes

Wet feet

If the soil is not dry, don't water her. Use your hands to feel if it's watering time, not a moisture meter. When the pot is light, water, if not, don't 😊

Misting/Spraying

When water keeps sitting on the leaves, these will get damaged, and all the pretty white will get brown.

Draft

She catches a cold quite easily, so make sure she is not standing in a draft

Stress

After all the shipping stress she endured, please avoid any extra stress caused by repotting or moving her around a lot
